

Vaccines Unit

1. Basic Problems

Why are vaccines a problem? They are a problem for some very fundamental reasons. First, students and teachers are not properly education and informed about the ingredients of the vaccine shots injected into their bodies, and scientists do not know the long-term effects of the rising vaccine-load being injected into our bodies. In countries like Canada and the United States, teachers even mislead students by threatening them with expulsion if they are not vaccinated. The truth is that in many provinces and states like Ontario, Canada and Texas, U.S.A., parents have the legal option of not having themselves or their children vaccinated.

2. The Nature of Vaccines

Vaccination is based on the theory that injecting weak disease viruses into human beings gives the human immune system a chance to prepare for the same but strong disease virus. Here are some of the basic problems:

1. Viruses normally enter through the nose or mouth, where many are destroyed and the immune system can respond naturally before the viruses enters the blood stream and vulnerable organs. Vaccination involves directly injecting viruses into the bloodstream.
2. Vaccines do not only consist of weakened viruses. Numerous preservatives and so-called stimulants are added, many of them toxic, many others consisting of cell tissue from babies and other species.
3. Some vaccines are now being administered for diseases that, supposedly, are not caused by viruses or bacteria. The HPV vaccine, for example, is for cervical cancer.
4. Too many vaccines are being administered, especially to infants, whose immune systems are not ready to defend them.
5. Schools are not educating children about vaccine contents and vaccine history.
6. The testimonies of parents who swear that vaccines have harmed their children are not being reported by the mainstream media. Consider the following video of parents testifying that a vaccine turned their triples into autistic children within 12 hours of vaccination.

Doctor Suzanne Humphries analyzes and critiques vaccines

This is a good explanation, but it does not ask critical questions like why humans are so prone to infectious diseases and why wild animals remain mostly free of such diseases. Can you think of some reasons?

Note: the above last of the above two articles assumes that formaldehyde is safe and that the eradication of various contagious diseases like smallpox, diphtheria and polio was caused entirely by the spread of vaccines. And how do we explain the sudden rise of contagious diseases in the first half of the 20th century? Here, according to one website, is a chart for the rise in smallpox cases during the previous century:

What caused this steep increase in the world's smallpox-related deaths? Was it possibly related to uncontrolled growth of populations in cities that could not provide clean water?

Now please read these short articles:

<http://www.prb.org/Publications/Articles/2005/CleanWatersHistoricEffectonUSMortalityRatesProvidesHopeforDevelopingCountries.aspx>

<https://www.cdc.gov/healthywater/drinking/history.html>

These articles claims that contagious or infectious disease death rates in the U.S. declined rapidly during the first half of the 20th century. This seems to contradict the chart above. Can you think of any explanations?

In 1974 India suffered a serious smallpox epidemic. How was it stopped? This article credits the WHO with stopping it:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1974_smallpox_epidemic_in_India

But how did they stop it? Was the solution improved water or vaccine related? The WHO is not clear about this:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/World_Health_Organization#Operational_history

What are some other explanations for the reported decline in infectious diseases? Here are at least three answers:
