

MODEST PROPOSAL 2.0

By Ryan Fang

Jonathan Swift had an idea to solve hunger and poverty by selling and eating babies. Although this is a good idea, humans have now ventured far beyond the need of food and money. We are obese and wealthy enough to afford iphones. However, humans have lost their conscience, morality and other qualities. When we are physically well, we are mentally and emotionally breaking down. No amount of wealth could satisfy the hole in our mind that is greed. Humanity has severely downgraded, making us no different from wild creatures. Every generation is worse than the last, making it harder for humanity to progress and prosper.

Our world is controlled by lying, backstabbing hypocrites, with many mindless followers and supporters. They care not about their country or citizens, making them unfit to rule us. They have no conscience about the people they are murdering or how much of the Earth they are polluting. They do not understand the severity of our Our world is “living proof” of the chaos they created. Even now, we are living on stolen land, land that has come from the many massacres of men (and women). We literally have the blood of millions on our hands.

Every day more and more of the environment is being destroyed. Not only have we murdered many people, we also destroyed many ecosystems that were home to millions of living creatures like us. Peace and harmony are merely false hopes that are never true. Even though we strive to be good, moralistic human beings, we seem to be everything other than that. It is pointless for humanity to go on if this is how the world will be operated in the future. We already foresee an ugly future, yet we do not change our habits.

One effective way to stop this from progressing is to get an extremely lethal biochemical weapon and use it upon ourselves, ensuring all living things are completely wiped out. Planes could spray the virus into the atmosphere and let humans inhale poisons such as carbon monoxide, cyanide, and Botulinum toxin. After a few hours, we will all be in harmony with nature. It would be quick and painless, not to mention effective as the world could be dead in a few hours time.

An alternative way to commit genocide is to genetically modify everything humans consume, and eventually to eat ourselves to death. However, this might take a while before humans feel the full effects of the GMOs, and this could also be painful. If this seems cruel, please consider that humans are already killing themselves by ingesting 'manure,' as in drugs, cigarettes, junk food and alcohol.

After humans are gone, nature will do its part, creating natural disasters to wipe out the work we've done during the past 10,000 years. Nothing we created deserves to stay; Nature should be relentless and unsparing. Structures will collapse, making way for things that might grow after we pass on. The Earth would finally have a well-deserved rest.

After humans are gone, the circle of life can begin. The green house and toxic gases will eventually disperse and lose their potency. After a few thousand years, cells may develop and begin to reproduce and start a new species. Who knows, the next intelligent species might not be the bipedal, upright sort of animal we are now. We might be upgraded and have more enhancements to our body. Or we may be a completely different kind of animal.

As it is evident of the unseen progress humanity has made towards changing us and the environment, it is hopeless to carry on. If we continue, we will only damage more, consume more, and cause biocide. If we execute ourselves, we may be giving our life to creatures that might be more sustainable and grateful of the Earth. "God" might even forgive our crimes and let us go to "heaven"
