

Corona Drama

During the recent COVID-19 outbreak, many of us have been deprived of our basic human rights to protect us from the virus. Governments have pledged transparency with citizens, but what degree of transparency are we witnessing? The governments' suspicious acts draw suspicion. Is coronavirus a hoax? As a matter of fact, many pieces of evidence point to this theory: world leaders and elite businesspersons selling large amounts of their stocks before the outbreak, flu symptoms and coronavirus symptoms holding many similarities and the governments' delayed and nonsensical responses to combat COVID-19.

Prior to the outbreak, the government was already aware that a coronavirus pandemic was coming. The evidence? Many government officials and socialites sold large amounts of their stocks around November 2019. Similarly, government officials and socialites sold large amounts of their stocks before the 9/11 incident, indicating that it was an insider job. As a result, government officials and socialites don't lose money and earn more money from insurance. Furthermore, American spies intercepted phone calls in Wuhan, China because of the growing military base for information. Conversations between people included discussions of an increase in pneumonia cases. Spies, collecting the raw information, put it in a situation report. Suspiciously, America's response is severely delayed, despite knowing the situation before the major outbreak.

Diagnostic policies also deserve skepticism and attention. At around the time coronavirus was introduced as a public health crisis, it also happened to be flu season. Symptoms of the coronavirus and flu are uncannily similar: fever, cough, fatigue, nasal congestion, sore throat, headache, diarrhea and runny nose. So, how do people discern between coronavirus and the flu? Flu deaths are being counted as coronavirus deaths because medical staff are unable to tell the difference. Unfortunately, this creates misconceptions about the deadliness of COVID-19. This is a fear-mongering tactic designed to keep us at home.

The government's response to COVID-19 is equally dubious. In short, they instruct us to stay home and avoid face-to-face socialization to prevent the spread of coronavirus. Furthermore, the government has closed a variety of public spaces: parks, bars, clubs, restaurants, etc. As a result, small businesses are on the verge of bankruptcy. In addition, people who work non-essential jobs rely on the government's financial support system. If we continue staying on lockdown, we will become more and more dependent on the government, and it will have more control over our finances.

Our governments do not seem sincerely devoted to resolving the current 'pandemic.' I believe the coronavirus response is designed to make us more reliant on the government. My belief regarding coronavirus is supported by the evidence: elites selling stocks before the outbreak, governments placing citizens on lockdown and the media overlooking the similarities between flu and coronavirus symptoms.
